What Is the Mathmat Used For?

Each row of five holes lets a child see a number as part of a full row. Plugging 3 holes and noticing the 2 still empty turns the number facts to 5 into something visible, and adding or pulling out plugs shows simple addition and subtraction. Plugs in 4 colours also support colour naming, sorting and repeating patterns across the rows.

Because the set has two mats, pairs can work together: one child builds a pattern or a number and the partner copies it on the other mat, then both check. Teachers can call out a quantity and ask children to show it. Counting all 60 plugs back into their container makes a useful tidy-up routine, and adult supervision is sensible with the youngest children because the plugs are small.
