Typical Use

Laboratories handle a steady flow of paper: request forms, result sheets, logbooks, quality-control records and filter-paper cards that must travel with samples or be archived. An envelope of this size takes standard A4 paperwork without folding, and its water-resistant lining gives extra protection against spills, condensation from cold boxes and humid transport conditions. Many sites place dried sample cards in a sealed plastic bag first and then slip the bag into the envelope with the accompanying forms, so everything for one batch stays together.

Write the destination, sender and batch details on the outside with a permanent marker before filling, and seal the envelope fully. Note that a lined paper envelope is not a leak-proof container for liquid specimens; those need dedicated sample transport packaging. Buying envelopes from the same lab consumables supplier in India that provides your tubes, bags and cards makes restocking simpler.
