What Is the Single-Edge Razor Used For?

Wards and clinics use disposable razors to remove hair from a patient's skin – for example where a dressing, adhesive tape or electrode has to sit on a hairy area, or as part of personal care for patients who cannot shave themselves. A one-patient, one-razor routine keeps blades from being shared between people.

Keep the cap on until the moment of use. Afterwards, put the cap back over the blade and destroy the razor in a controlled environment, as the product instructions require – in practice, many facilities drop capped razors into a sharps container and follow their own clinical waste rules. Clinics that restock from a single lab consumables supplier in India can order the razors together with cotton wool, tape and dressings.
