What Is the Farabeuf Retractor Used For?

A Farabeuf retractor is held by an assistant to draw the edges of a shallow incision apart so the surgeon can see and work in the field. Because each instrument is double-ended, the assistant can turn it round and use the other end without reaching for a new instrument. Used as a pair, one on each side of the wound, the retractors open the field evenly.

In teaching hospitals and surgical skills labs the pair is a routine part of a basic instrument set, and trainees learn to retract with steady, gentle tension rather than force. Clean the retractors promptly after each list and store them together so a pair is never split. Institutions issuing laboratory equipment tenders in India can enter the pair as a single line item.

What to Specify When Ordering

- Number of pairs required (the retractors are only supplied as pairs)
- Confirmation that the large size, approximately 15 cm, suits your procedures
- Companion instruments to be quoted for the same set, such as scalpel handles and tissue forceps
- Delivery address or port
