What Are Beakers with Handle Used For?

The handle is what sets these beakers apart: a litre or more of liquid is heavy and slippery to hold by the body alone, so the handle gives a firm, safe grip when carrying distilled water, diluting stock solutions or pouring buffer into a reservoir. The tall form keeps liquid further from the rim, which reduces splashing when a batch is stirred. The 3,000 mL and 5,000 mL sizes are useful for making up class quantities of a reagent in one go.

Being autoclavable polypropylene, the beakers can be sterilised for microbiology media work and reused. Keep them away from flames and hot plates, and pour slowly from the larger sizes, supporting the base with the other hand when the beaker is full.
