Typical Use

Extra deep trays hold items that stand upright or come in tall packs: bottles of hand rub and cleaning solutions, rolled bandages and bulk gauze packs, boxed sample containers, or upright files. On a hospital campus the trolley carries these from stores to wards; in a college or research building it moves boxed glassware and reagents between a central store and teaching labs, handling stairs where no lift is available. Deeper sides also help keep contents in place over uneven ground.

When the trolley is not travelling, park it where it is needed as a short-term storage point. Place heavy liquids in the lowest tray, keep bottle caps tight before moving, and take stairs slowly with a second person for heavy loads. Clean trays after use in clinical areas and let them dry before reloading.
