What Are Protective Laboratory Masks Used For?

These masks suit dusty and splash-prone jobs: weighing and transferring powders, grinding samples in a mortar, handling soil or dried plant material, and cleaning a prep room. The waterproof outer layer also helps against light splashes while glassware is being washed.

Loop the mask over both ears and adjust it so it covers the nose and chin fully. Keep in mind that a 3-ply mask is a particle and splash barrier, not a respirator: it does not filter toxic gases or solvent vapours, which must be handled in a fume cupboard. Change the mask when it becomes damp and discard it after a single use.

What to Specify When Ordering

- Number of masks needed — pack quantities are confirmed on the quotation
- Whether gloves and eye protection should be quoted as a complete safety set
- Whether you also want to compare the separate waterproof mask listing
