What Are Waterproof Protective Masks Used For?

Weighing powdered chemicals, grinding samples in a mortar, sieving soil or sweeping up after a practical all put fine dust into the air near the face. A 3-ply mask worn over the nose and mouth keeps much of that dust away, and because this one is listed as waterproof and chemical resistant it also suits messy bench work.

Fit the loops behind the ears, press the mask close around the nose and chin, and replace it after each session or as soon as it becomes damp or soiled. These are general-purpose masks, not sealed respirators, so work that releases toxic gases or vapours belongs in a fume cupboard. Pair them with eye protection and gloves for a complete basic safety kit.

What to Specify When Ordering

- Total number of masks, based on students per session and how often practicals run.
- Preferred packing, as pack sizes are not stated in the listing.
- Any gloves or eyewear to include in the same safety order.
