What Are Cavity Slides Used For?

In the hanging-drop method, a drop of broth culture or pond water is placed on a coverslip, the rim of the cavity is ringed with a little petroleum jelly, and the slide is lowered over the coverslip and turned the right way up. The drop then hangs inside the well, where students can watch bacterial motility or the swimming of Paramecium, Euglena and other protozoa without the sample drying out. The well is also handy for germinating pollen grains in a drop of sugar solution.

Find the edge of the drop with the low-power objective before moving to higher magnification. Because the borosilicate glass is chemical resistant, the slides can be cleaned with alcohol and used again, and they sit comfortably alongside stains and coverslips as part of the microbiology lab equipment in India’s school and college labs.
