What Is Sulphur Powder Used For?

Burning a small amount of sulphur on a deflagrating spoon, inside a gas jar in a fume cupboard, produces sulphur dioxide; moist blue litmus paper held in the gas turns red, showing that non-metal oxides are acidic. Gently melting sulphur and pouring it into cold water forms rubbery plastic sulphur, a clear demonstration of allotropy.

With a 500 g pack, a department can portion sulphur into labelled containers for each bench or class set. Sulphur dust is flammable, so keep it away from open flames except during controlled experiments, carry out every burning test in a fume cupboard, and store the bulk pack closed in a cool, dry chemical cabinet away from oxidising agents.

What to Specify When Ordering

- Product code SCL459/0141 for the 500 g pack, or SCI-556/165 if 100 g packs suit your labs better.
- Number of packs and how many labs will share them.
- Delivery address, and whether the shipment is domestic or export.
