What Is the Colour-Coded Human Skull Used For?

Beginners often struggle to see where one skull bone ends and the next begins, because on real bone the sutures are faint. Colour coding solves that: the frontal, parietal, temporal and occipital bones of the vault, and facial bones such as the maxilla, zygomatic and nasal bones, stand out as separate blocks of colour. A typical lesson has students name each coloured region, then cover the key and quiz each other until they can identify every bone without help.

Lifting off the skull cap moves the class from the outside of the cranium to the floor inside it, and removing the jaw exposes the mandible for separate study. Because the model is unmounted, it can be turned upside down to examine the base of the skull and the large opening where the spinal cord passes. It is a staple of school biology lab equipment in India, from secondary classes to first-year nursing and paramedical courses.

OEM Manufacturer

ScienceLab is the trading name of Jain Scientific Equipments Private Limited, the OEM (original equipment manufacturer) that makes this colour-coded skull at its own licensed factory in Saha, Ambala, Haryana, India. Schools, colleges, distributors and importers buy it factory-direct, and every quotation is prepared by the maker rather than a reseller.
