What Is the Medical Gown Used For?

Hospitals and clinics issue a medical gown to staff for tasks where blood or other body fluids may reach their clothing, such as dressing changes, sample handling and bedside treatment. In medical and nursing colleges the same gown is worn in skills labs, so trainees practise in the clothing they will later use on the ward.

Choose a size that closes fully at the back and still lets the arms move freely; a gown that is too tight pulls open when the wearer reaches forward. Keeping all three sizes in the store room makes it easy to fit a mixed team at short notice.

What to Specify When Ordering

- The number of gowns needed in each size: Medium, Large and Extra Large
- Any material, colour or sterility requirement your procedure sets, so we can check the gowns on offer against it
- Whether gloves and masks are needed for the same staff (see the related items below)
- The delivery location in India or abroad
