What Is the Isolation Coverall Used For?

A coverall encloses the back, arms and legs as well as the front, so it is chosen over a gown when staff need all-round cover in one garment. Typical uses are isolation rooms, sample-collection areas, and laboratory clean-up work where a waterproof outer layer keeps liquids away from clothing.

The two-layer build — a PP non-woven base with a PE film — is what gives the suit its waterproof character. Film-coated suits feel warmer than woven cloth, so plan shorter wear periods in hot rooms and give staff time to change. Institutions ordering through a laboratory equipment supplier in India usually add gloves and masks to complete the kit.

What to Specify When Ordering

- The number of coveralls in each size: S, M, L, XL, XXL or XXXL
- Confirmation that the 37 gsm PP non-woven and 28 gsm PE film build matches your procedure
- Any gloves, masks or shoe covers needed for the same wearers
- The delivery location in India or abroad
