Description :

Somso Human Lung Model (Product Code: SLE/A/27) is an enlarged anatomical model used to teach the structure of the lung lobule in medical, nursing and senior school biology classrooms. Magnified about 150× life size and mounted on a stand with base, it lets a whole group study lobule structure by eye before moving to the microscope. It is supplied by Jain Scientific Equipments Pvt Ltd (ScienceLab), Ambala, India, to institutions sourcing biology teaching aids in India.

What Is the Somso Lung Model Used For?

The lobule is where the finest air passages end and gas exchange takes place, a level of the lung that is hard to teach from flat diagrams alone. Lecturers set this model on the bench at the start of a respiratory histology session so students see the three-dimensional arrangement first, then look for the same pattern in stained lung sections under the microscope. It also supports discussion of why the lung's internal surface is so large and how that surface aids the diffusion of oxygen and carbon dioxide.

Because it shows tissue rather than the whole organ, it is most useful as the detailed companion to a gross lung model within a human biology model set. Keep it on its stand, point to features with a pointer instead of pressing on the surface, and dust it with a soft, dry cloth after use.

Supplier

Jain Scientific Equipments Private Limited trades as ScienceLab and supplies this lung model from Ambala, Haryana, to colleges, schools and laboratories in India and international markets. Because the product name refers to the Somso brand, please ask us to confirm brand and origin details when you request a quotation.
