What Are Plastic-Covered Ceramic Magnets Used For?

Iron filing demonstrations are where these magnets earn their place. Lay a magnet under a sheet of paper or card, sprinkle filings over it and tap gently: the filings line up along the field, and the bright plastic makes the dark pattern easy to see from the back of the room. Placing the pair end to end, with like or unlike poles facing, shows students how field lines crowd together between attracting poles and bend away between repelling ones.

The plastic cover is the practical advantage. Bare ceramic magnets collect filings and grime that are hard to remove and can chip at the edges, but a covered magnet simply wipes clean after the lesson. Store the two magnets side by side with opposite poles together, and keep them away from phones and cards.

Supplier

Jain Scientific Equipments Private Limited, trading as ScienceLab from Ambala, Haryana, India, supplies the Plastic-Covered Ceramic Magnets, Pair to schools, colleges and dealers. The company sources these covered magnets so they can be quoted together with iron filings, plotting compasses and other magnetism items.

Let us know how many pairs your classes need and we will include them in one quotation. More about the company is on our company profile.
